Round number 3 of the Mokena sewer fight was staged in the Will County Court before Judge Henry F. Ruel of Kankakee county Tuesday afternoon. The fight centered chiefly on jurisdictional objections. Of the three objections made by attorney Edward R. Nadelhoffer representing the Mokena objectors, the judge dismissed two, the lone objection dealing with the so called improper designation of the streets on which the proposed sewer system is to be located, was held for argument at the next hearing.

Attorney John Wellnitz, representing the St. Mary parish at Mokena, said he had not had time to become familiar with the case and asked for more time. Judge Ruel postponed the hearing to March 30 by which time all legal objections must be filed and the trial has been set for March 30. Legal objections will be heard next.

Attorney Howard Schlutz testified as a witness that he was not hired as an attorney for the village, but was an employee in the office of the president of the village board and his duties were to make affidavits.

Mokena High Team Wins 6 Out of 11 Games

Last Friday evening at Crete the school teams won two games and lost one. Scores were as follows: Mokena Grade School girls vs. Crete Grade School girls 10 to 4 in favor of Mokena. Mokena Grade Boys vs. Crete Grade School Boys 18 to 12 also in favor of Mokena; Mokena High School vs. Crete A. C. 25 to 16 in favor of Crete. All three games were fast and well played. This ended the basketball season for the Mokena school teams.

During the past season the High School team played eleven games, winning six and losing five. This team scored 291 points to their opponents 239. They were handicapped somewhat due to the fact that there are not enough two year high schools in this vicinity to fill out a schedule with such schools. Consequently they had to play some of their games with older and more experienced teams.

The girls team played 12 games; winning 7, losing 5, scoring 224 points to their opponents 195, and taking second place in the Will County Grade School Basketball.

The High School Girls played one game defeating the Alumni 20 to 4. The Grade School Girls played four games winning three and losing one.

Levy Tax For Road Oil But Fail To Buy It

Mokena's village political campaign is getting well under way.

The candidates for the new village board, namely, John C. Nielsen for village president and George Koeller, Milton Krapp and William Semmler for village trustees, are receiving the hearty endorsement of the property owners who are opposed to the sewer advocates.

It is up to the people of Mokena to say whether they want to put in the old group and have a debt of a life time hanging over them or if they prefer the new ticket which offers them an efficient administration with a progressive spirit, yet one that will not slap a mortgage on every foot of property in the village for years to come. The only way to get in a new board is to vote for all FOUR of the candidates named. It is up to every voter in favor of the change to boost for the new board and to vote for ALL FOUR candidates, or in other words to vote a straight ticket. At the proper time a specimen ballot will be printed in this paper and plenty of sample ballots will be available.

In July 1929 the present village board passed a tax levy ordinance appropriating $500 for oiling the streets for 1930, but no oil was purchased and the streets were not oiled. Last August the board again appropriated $500 for oiling streets in 1931.

Last week it was shown that the property owners living on certain streets in the village and who have been paying $5 per year extra for a special vehicle tax which according to the ordinance is to be used for street purposes only, yet in order to get their streets repaired the property owners had to raise a fund and pay for work done on the streets. It is up to the people to decide if they want to go along with these kind of conditions or if they are ready to clean house.

Snow Plow Clears Way For Funeral

For the first time in the memory of the oldest residents of this section a funeral procession had to follow a snow plow as was the case on Sunday when the funeral of Mrs. Minnie Zier of Tinley Park was held with burial in the St. John cemetery at Mokena. The state plow assisted by Clarence Bettenhausen's big ten wheel truck from Tinley was used to open the highways ahead of the funeral procession on Oak Park avenue north of Tinley to 143rd street on thru Orland Park west to Wolf road and south on the Wolf road to Mokena.

Mrs. Zier who passed away last Thursday evening at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry Wilke in Tinley Park after a seven weeks illness with the flu was a resident of Tinley Park for ten years.

She was born April 12, 1853 in Mecklenburg Schwerin, Germany. At the age of three years she came to this country with her parents who located at Richton. In 1872 she was united in marriage with George Zier who died at Mokena 22 years ago.

Surviving her are two sons, Henry and George Zier of Joliet; two daughters Mrs. Wm. Kern of Joliet, and Mrs. Henry Wilke of Tinley Park, 19 grand children, 13 great grand children, one sister, Mrs. Christian Andres, Sr., of Tinley and a host of friends. One daughter, Mrs. August Lorenz Harrington of Joliet died last July.

Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at the Zion Lutheran church in Tinley Park with Rev. Albert Buddenhagen officiating. Burial was in the St. John cemetery at Mokena.

Big Blizzard Ties Up Roads

The worst blizzard of the season swept the entire country last Saturday and snow. Drifts ranging from 3 to 10 feet blocked many of the main highways while some of the lesser travelled roads are not open yet.

The state and county snow plows were put in operation as quickly as possible and a lane was cut thru on 143rd street, Wolf road, route 51 and the Lincoln highway Sunday, but the heavy wind blew the openings shut and many cars were stalled. Some of the country roads were not opened until Wednesday.

Trains on the Rock Island were delayed for a few hours Saturday night when the interlocking plant at Mokena went out of commission.

The milk trucks could not get thru Sunday and a special car was ordered by the Bowman Dairy Co., on the Rock Island and set out at Mokena. Dairymen had to haul the milk in bob sleds and wagons to the car at Mokena.

Some of the country schools had to remain closed for several days. Attendances in the village schools at Mokena and neighboring towns were cut down about one fourth by Monday morning, but are back to normal now.

Floral Wreath on Mokena Village Hall Brings Publicity

Mokena burst into the limelight quite suddenly over night Thursday when some practical jokers hung a huge floral wreath on the village hall with a sheet of paper attached on which was inscribed the following:

"This town is dead, bury me with sewer."

Great was the consternation of the villagers and the village fathers on Friday morning when they saw the beautiful wreath and the mocking inscription. No one knew who did the stunt and the secret has not been disclosed to this day.

But greater still was the surprise to the town people and greater still the chagrin of the village fathers, when the story of the joke was emblazoned to the world by the following front page story in the Red Streak edition of the Chicago Daily News Saturday evening:

"Mokena, Ill. March 7—Indignant inhabitants of this village of 500, under the inspired guidance of the town marshal were attempting to determine today who hung the wreath of roses on the door of the town hall with the inscription, 'This Town is Dead.'"

And to top the climax the same story was broadcast by radio over station WMAQ.

Opposing political factions are preparing to hold a "wake" and see which side will bury "the dead town."

Propose Planting Of 2,000 Trees In Tinley Park

About two weeks ago at a regular meeting of the Tinley Park Lions club, the club received a communication from the American Tree Association requesting the club to co-operate in a national tree planting program of ten million memorial trees in commemoration of the Bi-Centennial of George Washington's birthday by Feb. 22, 1932.

The American Tree Association are promoting this at the request of a commission, appointed by President Coolidge during his term of office. Said commission appointed to devise a proper memorial celebration as described above.

In answer to this request the following committee was appointed to consider this request and devise a plan for executing same. These being A. E. Foskett, Selby Hirsch and Wm. Funk.

At the Lions Club meeting held Monday night this committee offered a resolution and plan which was adopted.

The plan consists of planting 2000 or more shade trees in this vicinity this spring.

"We have secured reservation," Mr. Foskett says "and are ordering 2000 Siberian or Chinese Elm seedlings at a special low price for this occasion. This type of elm has only been introduced into this country quite recently and has been highly recommended by the national government and the authorities as one of the most desirable tree to plant, on account of its many good qualities."

The Lions Club plans to buy these trees and distribute them in the following manner: They will sell them for five cents a piece and with each purchase of a tree they will give another tree as their contribution to this cause. The Lions slogan will be "At Least Two trees planted by each individual in our community." Can there be a planting of trees at less cost than this? More on this subject next week.

APRIL FOOLISHNESS

(Copyright, W. N. U.)

The first of April, some do say, Is set apart for all Fools' Day; But why the people call it so, Not I, nor they themselves do know. But on this day are people sent On purpose for pure merriment. But 'tis a thing to be disputed, Which is the greatest fool reputed; The man that innocently went, Or he that him designedly sent.

—Poor Robin's Almanac, 1760.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE of the most famous warnings of all history was that uttered to Julius Caesar: "Beware the Ides of March!" But the Ides of March, however fatal they may have been to the great Roman, are of little concern to us of modern times. Another day which will soon be here is the one when we do most of our "bewareing." That's the first of April and unless we're very alert some one is sure to make an April Fool of us.

The practical joker is with us always, but April 1 is the day when he is at his best. We may ignore the hat lying on the sidewalk (with the brick concealed under it) or the pocketbook (either nailed down or attached to a hidden string which whisks it from under our hands as we stoop down to pick it up) and then unsuspectingly accept an explosive cigar which a friend hands us or bite into a tempting chocolate cream and find it filled with cayenne pepper. We may avoid all of these familiar pitfalls for the unwary and then be "taken in" by a fake telephone call. "Mr. Lyon wants you to call him," they tell us. (Or it may be Mr. Wolf or Miss Ella Phant.) But when we call the number and ask for that person, a disgusted voice at the other end of the wire tells us "This is the zoo." Or it may be "Mr. Fish" whose telephone number turns out to be the aquarium or "Mr. Snow" at the weather bureau or "Mr. Coffin" at some undertaking establishment.

Some of the foolery, however, is on the decline. Large candy factories report that they no longer make April Fools' candy. Not that one cannot buy cotton balls disguised as sweetmeats; the obscure shops still supply them. The larger dealers, however, say that not only are calls growing fewer for such trick bonbons, but that they themselves run into the foreign substance law. Today, as every one knows, candy must pass a certain test. The pure food law has sounded the death-knell of the china baby doll dipped in bitter-sweet chocolate.

Where did this April Foolishness originate, anyway? The answer to that question is necessarily a difficult one, for this custom, like so many others, goes back so far and has developed in so many different forms in so many different countries that it is impossible to ascribe it to any one period or any one nation. There is evidence that the custom was prevalent in Asia in ancient times, tracing back to the celebration with festive rites of the period of the vernal equinox in Persia. It was the day when the Persian New Year began and was very close to the old English New Year's day of March 25. The sun was then entering into the sign of frisky Aries and on that day "the season of rural sports and vernal delights" began.

In India the Huli festival on March 31 for centuries has been a general holiday and time for jest. One of the favorite diversions consisted of sending people on long errands of fictitious import. Colonel Pearce, a British army officer and writer of a century ago, says: "High and low join in it. The late Suraja Dowlah, I am told, was very fond of making Huli fools, though he was a Mussulman of the highest rank. They carry the joke so far as to send letters making appointments in the name of persons who must be absent from their house at the time fixed upon; and the laugh is always in proportion to the trouble given."

From the Orient the custom came into western Europe many centuries ago. The ancient Romans took delight in many sorts of practical jokes in connection with their Feast of the Saturnalia and there are those who declare that the first April Fool joke was that one which Romulus and his "early settlers" in Rome played upon the Sabines by inviting them to the regular April First celebration in honor of Neptune and then carrying off by force the Sabine women.

For centuries the French have held a Festival of Fools on April 1, in which "every kind of absurdity and indecency was committed." Their term for April Fool is "poisson d'Avril," a term which means, according to one explanation, a young fish and therefore a fish easily caught. When Napoleon married Maria Louisa, Archduchess of Austria, on April 1, 1810, it gave the waggish Parisians an excellent chance to whisper among themselves that he was "un poisson d'Avril." But the classic French April Fool story is that of a young woman who stole a gold watch from the house of one friend and hid it in the house of another friend. She then turned the case over to the police. But they were sadly lacking in the imagination necessary to appreciate this joke. She was arrested for the theft and the judge, entering into the spirit of the occasion, sentenced her to jail for a year with the remark that she be discharged on April 1 the next year as "un poisson d'Avril." Another French classic is the escape on April 1, 1700, from prison by the duke of Lorraine and his wife, who shouted back to their guards the French equivalent of "April Fool."

April Fooling has been prevalent in Great Britain for centuries. There it mostly took the form of sending innocents upon "sleeveless errands." A boy might be sent to the cobbler's for "a pennyworth of his best stirrup oil" and then be mightily amazed when the angry shoemaker applied this "oil" to his back. Or he might be dispatched to the milk-vendor for "half a pint of pigeon's milk," to the bookseller's for "The Life and Adventures of Eve's Mother," to the butcher shop for a "meat auger" or to the bakery for "a pie-stretcher."

In northern England and Scotland this practice was called "Hunting the Gowk." An old couplet says:

"On the first day of April
Hunt the Gowk another mile."

The word "gowk" in reality means a cuckoo and was used metaphorically for fool, which undoubtedly is the origin of the modern slang phrase: "To knock a man cuckoo." There are plenty of connecting threads among all these words, "Gauch" in Teutonic is a fool, whence we get our word gawky, and "geac" in old Saxon was a cuckoo, whence is derived "geek," meaning one easily imposed upon. Remember the words of Malvolio to Olivia:

Why have you suffered me to be imprisoned
And made the most notorious "geek" and gull
That e'er invention played on?

Although April Fool's day appears to have ceased to challenge literary wits, there was a time in England when it brought forth observations from such scholars as Joseph Addison and that prolific and satiric writer Jonathan Swift. Swift seems to have entered into the spirit of the day and to have enjoyed the liberties granted to the practical joker on April first. He writes to Stella under date of March 31, 1713, about a jolly evening spent with two good friends "in contriving a lie for the morrow."

One of the commonest forms of April Fool jokes during past years in this country was the practice by newspapers of printing on April 1 some exciting story of an event which never happened and not revealing the fact until the reader came to the end of the yarn. There have been innumerable variations of this stunt, ranging from "scare" stories about the blowing up of the city hall and the assassination of city officials or the escape of all the animals in the zoo to more innocent stories about the discovery of buried treasure or the exhibition of some marvelous and seemingly impossible feat of skill or strength.

Some 40 years ago a Cincinnati newspaper printed a big story regarding a monster of fiendish aspect and unknown species which had been found inhabiting a cave in the hills east of the city, which had already carried off several children in its slaving jaws and had spread terror in the neighborhood. There was even a picture of the Thing, drawn from the descriptions of the two or three persons who had seen it clearly, and for malignant hideousness of aspect, that monster made all Calibans, dragons, Hurlerhumbos, demons and octopi look tame.

Finally, down at the latter end of the story in very small type, so small that many readers overlooked it, was set the legend, "April 1, 1888." Even some who noticed that date didn't grasp its significance, but continued to shudder with fear at the thought of meeting the monster.

Some Philadelphians still remember the story about the big iceberg that was "being towed up the river." Thousands went to the river front to see the spectacle and then denied that they had been taken in.

A quite modern hoax is told as follows by one who was in Ireland when it "happened":

Peace, of a kind, reigned in Dublin on March 31, 1922. There was tension in the air for the Irreconcilables, who refused to recognize the truce with England, had taken over the Four Courts and were known to be preparing resistance to the terms which Michael Collins and Arthur Griffith had signed. Anything was likely to happen.

About 1 o'clock on the morning of April 1 the Morning Post of London, the paper which reflected the views of those who thought that any truce with the Irish was a betrayal of Great Britain, received a telegram from Dublin stating that the Kildare Street club had been seized by the Irreconcilables, that the members residing there had been driven into the streets in their pajamas and that this social stronghold of British aristocracy in the Irish capital had been transformed into a stronghold of the enemy.

With due solemnity and with headlines that had not been surpassed since the declaration of the Armistice with Germany the telegram was published. And that night Dublin was flooded with correspondents—American, English and French—all prepared to cover the new "war." The British cabinet was called to Downing street for breakfast, and the world sighed in dismay and mourned that the Irish, when peace seemed in sight, "were at it again."

Only a few know the true story behind the April fool telegram that started this furore. There was in Dublin at the time a Major Clarke who had served with distinction during the World war, but who had never been the same since his experiences in Flanders. They had developed in him a "sense of humor" that was peculiar. On one occasion he collected all the boots left to be cleaned outside the bedroom doors of the largest hotel in Dublin and dropped them down the elevator shaft.

He was barred from the same hotel for throwing cream-filled eclairs at the guests during dinner. And it was he who sent the telegram. He was tired of peace and he thought it would be a good joke to start the Anglo-Irish struggle again. And, strange to say, he nearly accomplished his object, for the suspicious Irreconcilables thought the wire had been sent by the Free State government as a bait. But they were not yet prepared. The break did not come for almost three months.

Large Trees Killed by Drought Are Good

Excellent Plan to Cut Material for Farm Use.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)—WNU Service.

What to do with large trees killed by the drought is a question asked by many farmers who own woodlands. If the timber can be salvaged economically, the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture, advises cutting it now. If a market cannot be found for this material, it is better to cut it for future use on the farm than to let it go to waste in the woods. Many mature trees have succumbed in some of the drought-stricken sections, and if they can be used now it is better to cut them before they begin to decay. Trees containing saw logs may be good for lumber, and crooked or diseased trees can be used to augment the fuel-wood supply.

"There is always on every farm a need for construction and repair materials," the extension forester of Virginia points out, "and here is a chance to salvage those dead trees and at the same time provide a supply of repair material for years to come. There are many sawmill operators who would be glad to do a little custom sawing. Some of them would take their pay in logs. There are on almost every farm the tools, wagons and work stock necessary to do the logging and hauling."

"Properly stacked and roofed over with the commoner boards, lumber will keep almost indefinitely. Why not cut those trees this winter and have them turned into inch boards, 2x4s, 4x6s, and other sizes needed for the upkeep of the farm?"

Increased Use of Skim

Milk Powder for Fowls

Skim milk powder is somewhat cheaper than it was a few years ago and also easier to get. It is carried in stock by most feed merchants, particularly if these feed merchants are in a section where there are a number of poultry farms. Practically all poultrymen are now using more or less milk powder in their mashers. Because of lower cost and availability, more and more dairymen are using skim milk powder in calf feeding, this of course applying only in sections where whole milk is sold. This powder is mixed with water in the proportion of one part of powder to nine parts of water. When brought to a temperature of 95 to 98 degrees, the solution is fed exactly as skim milk would be fed. Some farmers say that, after calves have been well started on whole milk and have learned to eat grain and hay, the skim milk powder can be mixed with the grain rations and save the trouble of mixing with water and heating.

Good Heavy Oats Useful for Fattening Lambs

Recent tests in Indiana indicate that good heavy oats are equal in value to corn for fattening western lambs. Three feeding trials were conducted involving 150 lambs. Oats, cottonseed meal, clover hay, and corn silage were fed in comparison with shelled corn, cottonseed meal, clover hay and corn silage.

With the oat ration 577 pounds of oats, 51 pounds of cottonseed meal, 261 pounds of hay, and 284 pounds of silage were required for each 100 pounds of gain. With the corn ration 367 pounds of corn, 51 pounds of cottonseed meal, 462 pounds of hay, and 454 pounds of silage were required for the same gain. It is noted that the lambs on the oat ration consumed considerably less roughage which offset the value of the oats consumed.

Farm Hints

All-mash feeding permits greater sanitation in handling the chicks.

Leeks are spectacular subjects for the fall shows. Plant a row and bill them up carefully as they grow.

Hardy strains of alfalfa have averaged from 474 to 651 pounds more hay per acre each year than common varieties in experiments at the Pennsylvania state college.

No other hay equals alfalfa for feeding purposes and few crops are better for swine pastures. It also ranks high as a part of the mixture for pasturing other kinds of live stock.

The chick is handicapped by becoming infested with many parasites early in life. An earlier hatched chick gains resistance with age before the parasites become so numerous.

Trebly barley, though a high yielder, has weak straw and is susceptible to "spot blotch." Trials with pigs indicate its feeding value is somewhat lower than that of other kinds.

From breeding time forward to lambing time the ewe may be in a gradual gaining condition. In which case a strong lamb may be expected and a full udder to nourish it with.

WORLD WAR YARNS

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

The Original "Doughnut Girl"

Today she is known as Mrs. Robert E. Walbridge, wife of a Peterboro, N. H. business man who served as a lieutenant in the One Hundred and Third Machine Gun battalion, and in 1928, when she and her husband went to the American Legion convention in Paris, she was known as the president of the American Legion Auxiliary. But back in 1918 thousands of American soldiers who enjoyed the doughnuts, pies and coffee which she handed out to them knew her as Miss Irene McIntyre, one of the "Sallies." For she was the original "doughnut girl" of the A. E. F.

As one of the two daughters of Colonel McIntyre, once a Salvation Army commander in New England, she and her sister, Gladys, were among the first contingent of "Sallies" to join the American army in France. In March, 1918, the girls set up their field kitchen back of Ansonville in an old mill that the doughboys helped them repair and there day after day they made and served coffee by the gallon, pies by the hundred and doughnuts by the thousand. In June their canteen was at Roulecourt and at the end of that month they were moved to the Chateau Thierry sector and later toward the Swiss frontier.

They saw service with the Thirty-seventh, Forty-second and Seventy-seventh divisions. They were in the Argonne and at Thiaucourt when that village was destroyed by shell fire. A shell wrecked their canteen hut and for days they lived in a cellar.

As a result of their service on every front that saw an American division, they were cited in army orders and recommended for the D. S. C. by General Pershing himself. Returning to America in 1919 they marched in the place of honor just behind Gen. Clarence R. Edwards in the parade of the Yankee division and in a ceremony on Boston common the general cited them for bravery in continuing their work under fire at the front.

Irony of War

Four stalwart sons of an elderly French couple who lived in a province of France adjacent to both Belgium and Luxemburg, were called to the colors by French authorities at the outbreak of the World war. For four years not a word was heard of any son by the parents. Their property had been occupied by the Germans after the first big push. Then came the Armistice.

Two of the sons, survivors of four years of fighting, were granted immediate leave by the French because their parents were in territory that had been occupied. They started at once for home. At the same time the other two sons, who had been made prisoner in their first battle, were liberated from a German prison camp and began the journey to northern France.

The four boys arrived home the same day for a joyful reunion with their aged parents. Two of the boys had been through four years of almost continual battle; the other pair had survived the lack of nourishment inevitable to prison life. Yet, despite the vicissitudes they had borne, each of the four was square of shoulder, clear of eye. Each appeared fit to resume his life where he had laid it down in 1914.

And it is one of the horrible ironies of war that on the same day her four boys returned, scorched but whole from their adventures, the old mother was taken away. For suddenly, with the reunion at its height, she had gone ravaging mad.

Compensation

His experiences under shell fire transformed Fred R. Weiss of Chicago from a $2.50 per week waiter to an influential inventor and manufacturer.

Weiss left a hash-slinging job and little else to enlist in the Twenty-first Field artillery. His brother, back in Germany, served as an officer in the German army. But that didn't prevent Weiss from winning a D. S. C. for devotion to duty and bravery under fire. Boxes of burning powder were shooting skyward from the dump when Weiss' captain, W. C. Dunkel, attracted his attention to a pile of TNT high explosive toward which the flames were spreading. His arm had been injured. But Weiss dragged the remaining powder boxes, one by one, from the vicinity of the TNT. Then he fainted.

When the war ended, Weiss was given vocational training. He chose a four-year electrical engineering course at Lewis institute, Chicago.

Shortly after graduation, the former $2.50 per week waiter invented a device for detecting defective wiring. A company of which he, himself, is the head, markets this product—and Weiss has definitely emerged from the $2.50 class of wage earners.

Vast Arctic Waste May

Be Claimed by America

The eastern boundary of Alaska is the one hundred and forty-first meridian of west longitude. The western boundary through Bering strait is the one hundred and sixty-ninth meridian. These two meridians, projected northward, meet and mingle and jointly terminate at the North pole.

The area which they inclose in the waters of the Arctic ocean is thus in the form of a wedge or a piece of pie. David Hunter Miller, who is one of our best-known collectors and perusers of international documents and dogmas, claims for the Stars and Stripes all the lands which may be discovered within the Arctic waters so bounded.

He bases his contention on claims officially similarly set forth by Canada and by Russia to all lands in the waters between their northern continental rims and the northern top of the world. Our government has on this theme asserted nothing. Nor have any lands, in fact, been yet discovered in the waters northward from our Alaskan domain.

It is difficult in international law to stake out any claims over a sea, even when the sea, through the congelation of the cold, is solid. The advancement of claims by us in this region awaits further advances by our explorers.—William Hard in the Saturday Evening Post.

Three Strips of Bunting

"Private Duprez!"
"Here!"
"Step forward!"

A young soldier of barely average height, with nothing that was strikingly military in his bearing, but with a countenance pronouncedly intellectual, and dark eyes that had a deep and constant glow in their depths, stepped out of the ranks, approached the group of officers and stood at attention.

"Duprez!" said Colonel Mangin, twirling one end of his gray mustache with the fingers of a neatly gloved hand while he regarded the private critically. "Your lieutenant says you are intelligent."

"Thank you," replied Duprez without emotion.

"It remains to be proved that you are brave."

The soldier straightened himself, and a slight flush spread over his face that was naturally of an unusual pallor. The colonel smiled.

"I mean braver than brave," he explained, not without a sign of satisfaction as well as of amusement. "We are all brave here, I trust; but some must be braver than others."

"Yes, sir," the soldier answered.

There was a moment's pause, while the colonel still toyed with his mustache—it was a very fine one—and continued to study the man standing rigid at attention. Duprez as a soldier looked very new, as if just turned out.

Behind him stood at ease two battalions of soldiers, looking precisely as new and just turned out as Private Duprez. They were, indeed, fresh battalions just brought up from their divisional depot to the rear of the firing line.

They would, in all likelihood, go into action that day in support of the —th regiment, which had suffered heavily in the first French advance beyond the Vosges. They were halted now at the foot of a long, low hill in the green, rolling country of Lorraine.

"You are aware that we are short of officers?" said the colonel at last.

"Yes, sir."

"I want a man to lead a detachment to perform an important and perilous duty."

"Very well, sir."

"You are willing?"

The soldier's eyes brightened and a smile came to his thin lips.

"I am not afraid."

"Good!"

"But I have one request to make."

"The deuce you have!" cried the colonel, sharply. "What is it?"

"That you permit me to choose the men whom I am to lead."

"Um-m!" murmured the colonel.

Then he looked questioningly at the lieutenant who had recommended Duprez for the command. That officer nodded his head.

"As you wish," consented Colonel Mangin. "It's perhaps as well you should have men you know. Your work is this: Four miles down the road you will find a bridge. Hold it or destroy it. You understand?"

"Perfectly."

"Then choose your men."

"How many, sir?"

"Twenty."

Duprez saluted once more, turned, and stepped slowly back to the waiting lines of red and blue.

They watched curiously as Duprez went to the right end of his own battalion and, walking very slowly along its front, began to choose his men.

"Tillier, step out!"

He was one of the smallest men in the battalion, with a look of undernourishment about him, but with noticeably keen features and an expression of restlessness in his eyes.

"Tillier, step out!"

He was one of the smallest men in the battalion, with a look of undernourishment about him, but with noticeably keen features and an expression of restlessness in his eyes.

"Duval!"

This was a man of almost stalwart figure that seemed scarcely to belong to the studious face and the finely shaped head.

"You next!"
His was a figure that only the loose laws of conscription could have passed into an army fighting for a nation's existence. He was small, even for a petit soldat of France. But something in the way the man moved, and especially something in his long, thin face bespoke courage and power that might well have had their habitation in a stronger and a finer body.

By the time Duprez had selected two or three more of the men who were to follow him it was apparent to the watching officers that there was a curious method in his nominations. For the dangerous and difficult mission upon which he was about to be sent he was not choosing those of the battalion who looked the best soldiers or the readiest men for an undertaking that required courage, quickness and endurance.

Every face as he passed down the line was scrutinized closely, and it was clear that none but the intellectual—if they might be so described—appealed to him. And when he had found his twenty the officers could not repress exclamations of amazement, not unmixed with mirth, to see them assembled for review and instructions, looking as if they should have had books in their hands instead of rifles.

"Don't quite like the looks of that lot—for blowing up bridges," said the colonel, directing himself especially to Duprez' lieutenant.

That officer also had his doubts; but he realized that, Duprez having been given permission to choose his men, to make any changes in his command would be to imperil the success of the expedition and perhaps to weaken discipline and confidence in the two battalions.

"It's too late now, don't you think?" he ventured to suggest in reply.

"I suppose so," growled the colonel, returning to his mustache.

And so Private Duprez, with a curious smile lurking at the very corners of his mouth, and a deeper glow in his firm, dark eyes, was allowed to set about quickly informing his men of the task before them.

"Any man who doesn't like the job may step out, and I'll find another," he said tersely when he had finished. Not a man moved; there was doubt and curiosity on their faces, but no fear.

"That's better," admitted the colonel in the ear of the lieutenant.

Half an hour later Duprez and his twenty, carrying charges of dynamite in addition to their rifles and knapsacks, set out down the white road leading to the distant bridge.

They felt a curious thrill with the thought that they were in Lorraine—that far south of them other French regiments were in Alsace—that after forty years of patient waiting the hour of France had come, and the tricolor again waved over the fair, lost provinces.

Only now and then the sound of cannon and the faint rattle of rifle fire from far over the hill at their left reminded them that the provinces had not yet been conquered—that the fight had not yet been won.

They marched in silence for almost an hour very slowly, lest they tumble unexpectedly upon outposts or scouts of the enemy. Then suddenly Duprez, who until that moment had addressed barely a few short words of command to his men, turned around and faced them.

Something strange in his countenance and manner brought the twenty to a sharp halt in their very tracks, where they stood regarding him expectantly. For a moment Duprez stood, studying them with that same keen scrutiny they had observed when he selected them for this expedition.

"Brothers!" he cried.

A moment's pause.

"Comrades!"

Another pause.

"Brothers, comrades, fellow men! Why are we here?"

They could only look at him, puzzled by his words, so irrelevant to the hour, but fascinated by his fiery manner and the ring of his voice on the still air.

"Have you ever stopped to think why we are fighting? Did you stop to think back yonder when we passed the graves of our brothers of the —th, why they died, and why we shall die after them? Will you stop to reflect now what all this means?"

The little knot of men stole swift glances at one another's faces and saw here and there a flush, and heard a quickening of the breath and felt a movement of expectancy. Then all eyes were again fixed on their leader.

"Brothers," he went on, "I chose you for this undertaking because I saw in your faces that you are not mere clods—that you are not only brave men, but men who can think. I chose you because I knew that you would have the courage to die for—hear me now!—to die for a cause—for the cause!"

He paused and bent eagerly toward them. Would they understand his meaning? Would they know what he meant by the cause? For a moment the most intense silence held them, one and all. Then there was a nervous movement; their faces—not all, but some of them—lighted up; and one—it was little Tillier—uttered a sharp, swift "Ah!"

It was only an exclamation—scarcely more than a whisper in the air. But upon Duprez the effect was magical, as if it had been a signal, a command.

The men had been studying him curiously as he spoke to them. Each had wondered not a little at being picked for this expedition. None had become acquainted with him in the brief period of mobilization, of equipment at the depot, and of transportation in the crowded military train from Epinal to the front.

Three or four, including Tillier and Duval, had learned his name, and found him a studious, silent, curt fellow, not exactly rude or unsympathetic, but uncommunicative and apparently absorbed in his own thoughts.

Duprez, with a sudden motion, raised his rifle high in the air and flung it fiercely into the dust of the road at his feet.

His hands went swiftly to the cartridge-box at his belt, tore it open, and scattered the cartridges far and wide on the road. Then, with an acceleration of reckless determination, he jerked the belt itself from his body and hurled it away from him, the bayonet in its sheath falling with a clatter far from the discarded gun.

There followed buttons, and numbers, and all else that was detachable from his once complete and proper uniform.

"This," he cried, "is my answer!" He raised himself erect, folded his arms, and looked with mingled defiance and appeal at the amazed and silent men.

"This is my answer to the murderers—my answer to the emperors, kings, presidents, politicians, capitalists, bankers, makers of guns and powder—all the money-sodden and power-crazed schemers who have brought twenty millions of slaves together to shoot each other down."

"Stop!" flung out a voice from the group of men before him.

Duprez paused and looked anxiously but fearlessly toward the speaker.

"Well, Martineau?" he demanded sharply.

"This is treason!" replied the man resolutely. He was the largest among them—a very presentable figure of a soldier in his new uniform—and his honest face had perhaps a little less of the introspective expression that characterized the pale countenances of his companions.

"Treason? Treason to whom? Treason to what?" demanded Duprez, advancing a step and treading his heel under his feet.

"Treason to your country! Treason to France!" retorted Martineau.

Among the others there was now apparent a division of feeling, a conflict of emotions aroused by the fiery and appealing words of Duprez and the sharp and antiseptic reminder of Martineau.

Duprez saw instantly that he had perhaps half of his men already won, prepared as they had doubtless been by their reading, and that he had a fair chance to convince the others.

"Treason!" he cried scornfully. "Treason to France, already betrayed by parliamentary cliques! Treason to a country already plundered by grasping politicians! Treason to the Patrie already tottering to the grave dug for her by her own men—so-called men who fill the magazines of her battle-ships with rotten powder—Don't you know why the Liberte blew up?—men who fill their pockets with millions appropriated to buy a worn-out and bankrupt railroad—men who trade in the nation's property and the nation's lives—men who fatten on the corpses of the poor—men who reek with—"

"No!" shouted Martineau. "Treason to the country of Deroulede and Poincare; treason to the nation attacked by the tyrant who wants to put his foot on every province of France as he has on Alsace and—"

"Oh, there you are!" broke in Duprez. "That foolish cry of Alsace and Lorraine! What is Alsace? What is Lorraine? What is France? What is Germany, Austria, Russia? What are these imaginary lines drawn across fields and mountains and valleys?"

"What are these artificial divisions of men that are set to fighting one another on the flimsiest pretexts to gratify the lust of rulers. The German tyrant, you say! Yes, the German tyrant, the Russian tyrant, the French tyrants. What is the republic of France, as it stands today, but another form of that same corruption, that same autocracy, that same triumph of the few over the many that rules in all the world? Because you go to the polls and vote, do you think you are any the less a slave? Listen!"

There came over the hill the distant but somewhat nearer roar of guns.

"Brothers shooting at brothers!" Duprez continued. "Do you suppose those poor devils of Germans want to kill us? Do you suppose this is their war? Do you suppose we should ever have come hunting each other over these fair hills and valleys if we had come to know each other's thoughts—if we had had the sense and the courage to unite ourselves, to work together for the cause of man?"

"Do you think this sort of thing is going on forever? Some thought it was going on forever away back in 1793. In the name of God, are we going to lose the gain won by the sacrifices of our ancestors in the cause of human freedom? Are we for all time going to be fooled by the silly shibboleths of country and flag and patriotism?"

"To die for three strips of bunting sewn together! For a boundary line that hasn't even a river or a range of mountains or any other kind of an excuse! For a sentiment that enables your masters, blood-sucking vampires, to keep you huddled in your pens, to be plundered and plucked at their will! If you want to die—"

They were all silent now—even Martineau, as Duprez took another step toward them, his head lifted high, his eyes blazing with the fire of his spirit, his face grown almost majestic and Godlike under the transforming power of his idea.

"I have brought you here to prepare you to die for a cause—for the greatest of all causes—for the cause. The brotherhood of man! It is coming. The way is prepared. But a little while and such a war as this will be impossible."

"The armed hordes will no longer move at the command of tyrants. Germans, French, Austrians, Russians, English—all alike will refuse to kill one another at the will of a few shrewd and self-seeking schemers who play upon the folly and the credulity of the masses. The masses! The masses shall rule, and the powder factories shall be idle, and the warships shall rot at their piers, and the bayonets shall be turned into—"

He was interrupted for a moment by the much nearer tumult of the battle that was raging beyond the hill. But he smiled in a kind of triumph.

"They are dying yonder—for nothing—for worse than nothing. I tell you that the world of men needs only the inspiring uplift of a great example. I have thrown down my rifle. I ask you to throw down yours. We shall wait for our brothers to come and find us. We shall not resist. We shall be tried by court-martial and shot at dawn, in the sight of the two battalions, who will see for once what real courage may achieve."

"We shall set our great example before France and before the world. If we must die, let us die for something worth our lives, our reason and our souls. Let us die for the great cause of peace and humanity—for the brotherhood of man! No more militarism! No more butchery of peoples! No more tyranny!"

With the last words he drew from an inside pocket of his coat a small volume, worn and ragged from long study, turned to a well-worn page, and began to read:

"Patriotism is, for the ruling classes, a sentiment natural and profitable; for us it is a fool's trap. The nation is for them a kindly mother; for us it is a stepmother, a shrew who detests and persecutes us."

"We are well aware that if a war should break out between France and England or Germany, it would be but the capitalists of each country cudgeling each other for the markets of the world. If we have to risk our lives, we should risk them not to defend nationalities, but rather to found the socialist nation that we already carry in our brains."

"Herve," cried Tillier, as he raised his rifle and flung it on the ground.

The name was repeated here and there; and another rifle—two, three, four—slipped from loosened fingers and dropped into the dust or were thrown down like Tillier's.

"Yes, Herve, our great teacher, our prophet. Listen!"

And while the roar of the battle grew steadily nearer, on the other side of the hill, he read:

"Flags are only emblems. They have no value beyond what they seem to represent. There are thousands of flags that no longer stand for anything. And countries! What are they? Every country or nation, so called, is composed of two groups of men—the few seated at the loaded table and the mob begging for the crumbs. A country of the present time is nothing but a monstrous exploitation of man by man. Behold your country that they wish us to die for! Behold—"

A shell came screaming over the hill and exploded so near them that dust flew into their faces. Duprez stopped for an instant, and there was a brief change in the expression of his countenance.

But, whatever it was, he forced it back and read on. And as he read, in his fervid and thrilling way, more rifles dropped from the hands of the men before him.

"It's true!" cried one as he tore off his belt and buttons.

"No; that's too strong!" protested another, but not quite resolutely.

"The time has not come," was Duprez's answer. "We shall be dead tomorrow anyhow. The hour has struck!"

Looking keenly at the faces of his comrades, he saw that he had all but won the day—that in another moment his men would follow him in whatever path he might choose to lead them.

Thrilled with his triumph, glorying in the sacrifice he was about to make, he thrust his book back into his pocket, and faced the men to make the last appeal, something from his own heart, clothed in his own eloquence, a speech he had long ago framed for some such moment of greatness. But even as he opened his mouth, before he could utter the first word of his peroration, there came an interruption that held him and all the others spellbound.

There was first a furious outburst of battle-sounds, cannon and musketry and shouting; this time very near—nearer than they had imagined the fight to be at that moment.

And then, over the brow of the hill, and not three hundred yards away, appeared a part of the battle-line itself under their very eyes.

There was a tattered flag that waved and dipped and rose again and dipped and rose in the thick of a terrific hand-to-hand encounter—men in a fury of battle fighting around the flag. And the flag was the tricolor—merely "three strips of bunting sewn together," as Duprez had said.

And it was retreating. The French line on the hill had been broken and this fragment, with the flag in its center, was being forced back and German hands were at the very throat of the flag-bearer.

Back they came, back down the hill, the Frenchmen rallying again and again around the flag, again and again thrown away from it, again and again flinging themselves to save it. God of battles, what a sight!

And then the watching knot of men caught sight of the color-bearer himself—a mere boy, capless, his coat torn almost from his body, the flag-staff clutched to his breast with one hand while with the other he thrust at enemies right and left with some weapon they could not see.

In an instant he was swallowed up again.

There were sights that were new and fearful to the men in the road, in their new uniforms, with their yet unused guns lying

CONOCO PROGRAM DEDICATED TO SOUTHWEST

Dedicated to the Southwest, the next program of the Conoco Listeners' Hour, weekly broadcast sponsored by the Continental Oil Co., will feature songs typical of that section of the country; its charm will be described, and motor travelers will be urged to include it on their summer vacation schedule.

Peggy and Pat evolved the idea of dedicating some of the programs to various sections of the country since many listeners requested songs typical of their own region. Future broadcasts will salute other sections of the country which are of unusual interest to motorists.

The program will be the 16th of the series. Peggy and Pat the representatives of the radio audience will, as usual, direct the program in accordance with requests from listeners. The Conoco orchestra and the quartet will be featured.

Tune in next Thursday evening, March 19, for this broadcast, transmitted in this territory by station KYW at 7:30 p. m.

More than 73,000 miles in a New Ford

THE substantial worth of the new Ford is reflected in its good performance, economy and reliability. Its stamina and endurance are particularly apparent in sections where bad roads and severe weather put a heavy extra burden on the automobile.

In less than a year a new Ford Tudor Sedan was driven more than seventy-three thousand miles over a difficult route. The operating cost per mile was very low and practically the only expense for repairs was for new piston rings and a new bearing for the generator.

The car carried an average load of 1200 pounds of mail and was driven 250 miles daily. "The Ford has never failed to go when I was ready," writes one of the three mail carriers operating the car. "The starter did the trick last winter even at 34 degrees below zero. The gas runs about 20 miles per gallon. At times I pull a trailer whenever I have a bulky load."

Many other Ford owners report the same satisfactory performance. Every part has been made to endure — to serve you faithfully and well for many thousands of miles.

• • Blending makes it better

invokes his highest genius that our sense of smell may be gratified. In a work-room fragrant with the aroma of many types of coffee beans, a highly-paid specialist concentrates his energies that we may be provided with a coffee blend to please our palates. Whether it's soup or soap, tobacco or tea, music or mustard... blending is vital to the production of the best of each. Equally as vital, if not first in importance, is the knowledge and genius of the blender. He must know how.

The best gasoline, too, is blended. In the processes of a modern refinery three types of gasoline are produced. They are, Natural Gasoline, Straight-run Gasoline, and Cracked Gasoline. Each possesses certain desirable qualities necessary for perfect motor operation... but... no one of them possesses all these wanted characteristics.

So CONOCO Gasoline is a blend of the three. There is Natural Gasoline, to give quick starting. There is Straight-run Gasoline, to give power and long-mileage. There is Cracked Gasoline, with its desirable anti-knock quality. Just as carefully as the perfume blender at his delicate task, CONOCO refiners have developed their balanced blend of these three ingredients. Theirs is the gift of knowing how to merge the qualities of the three gasolines to create a balanced, triple-test fuel. One brand of coffee outsells all others because of the expertness of its blender. And so, with CONOCO Balanced-Blend Gasoline, the skill of the blender accounts for the popularity of the product. Stop today at the sign of the CONOCO Red Triangle and have your gas tank filled with this better motor fuel.

National Commission Sees Changing Opinion on Branch Banking Issue—Studies Group and Chain Banks.

NEW YORK.—Modification of the attitude of bankers on the long disputed branch banking question is forecast in a review and report covering rapid changes going on in banking issued here by the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. The report, however, after referring to recent proposals that national banks be given branch banking powers within the business territory surrounding their location, declares that "we do not believe that so-called 'trade-area' branch banking is likely to gain the support of any large percentage of the banking fraternity."

The commission says that the "most important development that has affected American banking in recent years involves the rapid growth of multiple banking organizations in the form of group, chain and branch banking systems," and adds that "we present this report as an unprejudiced economic study and have no theories or policies to urge at this time." The statement says that the commission's information indicates there are now 269 group or chain bank systems, which control 1922 banks and $15,285,000,000 in aggregate resources, and that there are only six states and the District of Columbia where it does not find any group organizations.

The Commission's Investigation

"We have been in touch with the managers of many important bank groups," the report says. "Aside from the obvious economies of centralized operation and control a number of these organization heads very frankly tell us that they do not feel that the system has been in operation and tested long enough to justify them in making positive or sweeping statements as to its advantages or disadvantages compared to unit banking."

"The Banking and Currency Committee of the House, which is conducting an investigation into banking developments, has called a number of operating heads of some of the great group systems. These men declared that they found, under certain conditions, definite operating and economic advantage in both group and branch banking over independent unit banking. Some thought group banking was only a transitional stage, that branch banking was preferable and if it were permitted on an extensive enough scale they would change their groups over to branch systems. Others held that group banking was preferable."

"Some held that the ideal plan was a combination of the two with group bank units for localities strong enough to support complete banking institutions and with branch offices extending further into the smaller places requiring banking services but not large enough to support complete banks. Several of these who advocated multiple banking declared that nevertheless they believed there would always be room for vigorous independent unit bank competitors."

Government Officials Express Views

"The Comptroller of the Currency recommended that national banks be given branch banking powers within 'trade-areas.' The Governor of the Federal Reserve Board appeared to be in general agreement with the Comptroller. He said there were 24,645 banks and 3,547 branches, a total of 28,192 banking offices; that in this total, 6,353 offices were either branches or bank members of groups, or both, leaving 21,839 banking institutions that might be definitely termed independent unit banks, having no branches and in no way connected with group affiliations. He said all the banks had total loans and investments of $58,500,000,000, of which the group and branch systems held $30,000,000,000, or more than half."

"He opposed nation-wide branch banking at present but said that ultimately if bankers became trained and experienced in the larger technique of 'trade-area' banking he thought it would in time evolve nation-wide branch banking under control of relatively few banks, but he did not believe this would mean monopoly or lack of competition. He favored branch over group banking which, however, he said represented an economic development along 'trade-area' lines and would spread unless something else were substituted and thought 'trade-area' branch banking would serve this purpose."

"It is the intention of the Commission to develop its own studies in these questions, watch carefully every move that is made and every bit of information that may develop in this connection and keep itself prepared to give an unbiased and accurate statement of the facts of the case whenever that is desired," the report concludes.

Federal Reserve Pays Government

In the fifteen years since its establishment in 1914, aggregate net earnings of the Federal Reserve System's twelve regional banks have amounted to $515,216,000, of which $90,872,000 has been paid to the member banks as dividends, representing 6 per cent annually on their contributions of capital to the reserve banks, while $277,434,000 has been added to the surplus of the reserve banks and $147,110,000 has been paid over to the Federal Government as a franchise tax.

WINTERTIME RADIO RESULTS OBTAINED DURING SUMMERTIME

No Longer Is There a Dividing Line Between One Season and the Next in the Pursuit of Radio Happiness.

By DR. ALFRED N. GOLDSMITH
Chief Broadcast Engineer, R. C. A.

Radio, unlike canned goods, has no winter or summer season. There are fresh vegetables the year round in the radio garden, so that it is hardly necessary to harvest and can our radio enjoyment during a few months for use in what might be a less fortunate season.

If we mentioned wintertime or summertime phonographic music, we might be laughed at, because the phonographic presentation has come to be accepted as a permanent, unchanging, immune form of entertainment, ready to serve in mid-winter or mid-summer alike. And by the same token, when radio programs and radio services are maintained from one end of the year to the other at the same high levels of excellence, with little difference to indicate the passing seasons, it becomes decidedly out of order to speak of seasonable radio.

Today the signal strength of any first-class broadcasting station within its service range is more than ample to ride high above the normal summertime static level. Indeed, it is only when the radio enthusiast insists on going in search of DX or long-distance signals that the static level becomes troublesome, since he has plunged below it.

Important Considerations

Of course the elements of good reception should perhaps be more closely observed in summer than in winter. Among the more important considerations are:

1. Selecting the signals from a station of adequate power, located not too far distant. It is well that the station have a reputation for careful maintenance, and be quite free from the criticisms of poor transmitter operation, haphazard monitoring, varying power, serious fading, wave length wobble, and other signs of poor broadcasting. Fading, it goes without saying, is usually a condition beyond the control of the broadcaster, and may just as well be charged up to the location of the listener.

2. Selecting high quality programs, and especially features with sufficient "body" to cover up such static background as may exist even with high signal level. It is well to note that signal level is one thing, and sound level is another. Thus a dance orchestra or concert band is a better feature in combating static interference than a string trio or a violin solo.

3. It is well to be content with reasonable volume. While it is true that the volume control of the radio set increases or decreases everything issuing from the loudspeaker—static as well as signal—proportionately, it is a matter of how much background noise may be present before the listener becomes fully conscious and even irritated by its presence. By being satisfied with reasonable volume during the days of high static, we may reduce the background noise to a minimum. The power of transmitters is not reduced during the summer months. Hence in most localities there is ample signal strength from leading stations to ride well above the usual summer static, with the exception of the occasional thunderstorm in the immediate neighborhood. Yet who expects ideal radio conditions every night? Try driving your automobile through a thunderstorm at night, with the dazzling flashes of lightning, the torrential downpour of rain, with the ignition system in difficulties due to moisture, and other troubles! Still, we do not speak of summertime automobile handicaps. We are willing to forego motoring during the occasional storm of winter or summer.

Quality Programs

Programs are maintained at the highest standards, although in keeping with seasonable moods and activities of outdoor weather, they may be pleasantly different from those of indoor weather. The skilled program director, in fact, pays close attention to the demands of his summertime audience.

As to the radio listener, there is just as much reason to listen in during the summer as during the winter. Music, enlightenment, contact with the world, the thrill of sporting events, participation in history in the making, and other program features form a rich mental background for our summer life.

If anything, radio may truly be enjoyed to better advantage amid the outdoor setting made possible in warm weather. The acoustics are frequently better when windows can be thrown open. Radio is at its best outdoors, on the porch or even on the lawn. Indeed, too little attention has been paid to the stage setting for the radio presentation, and summertime offers us many an opportunity in this direction.

VOICE AND PICTURES NOW SYNCHRONIZE

New Apparatus Made Available for Schools, Churches and Motion Picture Theatres.

Engineers are now at work on a simplified photophone device suitable for use in the home, which will make it possible, it is stated, to reproduce "talking movies" in the home very much as the ordinary radio broadcast programs are now being received in more than eight million homes. This announcement was made by General James G. Harbord, President of the Radio Corporation of America, at the formation of a new company to be known as "R. C. A. Photophone, Incorporated."

Gen. J. G. Harbord

In discussing the formation of the new company, General Harbord pointed out that although the Radio Corporation, General Electric and Westinghouse had been preparing for several years to market apparatus synchronizing voice and music with motion pictures, public introduction of the apparatus had been delayed until the engineers had achieved "complete practicability" so that it would be as simple to operate as a radio set, and, at the same time, highly perfected.

"The Photophone," said General Harbord "is both simple and practical. The essential principle is the recording of pictures and sound on one film. While various methods have been devised for 'talking movies,' experience has shown that the most practical is that of recording pictures and sound on the same film. This is the method employed by the Photophone. It is now possible to photograph the President of the United States—voice as well as action—and to distribute films reproducing the event throughout the country."

Uses and Operation

"Easily operated reproducing apparatus for use in theatres, schools and churches will be nationally available. An entire opera, musical comedy or drama can be electrically recorded on the film, just as it is seen and heard, and then reproduced from the same film. Whatever can be seen or heard, whether it is a nightingale singing or an army in battle, can now be recorded and reproduced for both the eye and the ear. Moving picture dramas with complete orchestral accompaniment, or with music and speech, will be available for nation-wide use."

"Standard films without the sound can be used without any change in the machine. The only thing the operator has to do is to close one switch when he is projecting pictures with sound, and open it when he does not want the sound. Any type of 'talking film' can be used in the machine. The type of sound reproducer to be used will vary with the size of the room in which the pictures are to be shown. The reproducer embodies some remarkable new developments in acoustics."

"Sight and hearing have been the two avenues of approach to the human mind for education, religion and entertainment. Now one medium combines the appeal to sight and hearing simultaneously, with universal accessibility and availability. The complete practicability of the new art has already been demonstrated, and there remained only the need for an intelligent and serviceable system of manufacture and distribution."

"One can only guess at the many varied uses of this invention as an instrument for the spread of knowledge, for bringing the people of the world closer together, and for the advancement of civilization."

AMERICA LEADING IN RADIO COMMUNICATION

The opening of a new, direct radio channel between New York and Lisbon, Portugal, for the transmission and reception of Radiograms was recently announced by the Radio Corporation of America. The inauguration of this radio circuit adds another spoke to the world-wide communication system which has New York as its hub and radiates directly to England, France, Germany, Italy, Holland, Belgium, Sweden, Norway, Poland, Turkey, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Venezuela, Porto Rico, the Dutch West Indies, and Dutch Guiana. From San Francisco other direct radio circuits join the United States to Hawaii, Japan, the Philippines, Hong Kong and Shanghai, China, the Dutch East Indies and French Indo China. To further insure the continued supremacy of the United States in transoceanic radio communication the RCA is planning additional circuits for the near future to countries as near as Canada and Cuba, and as distant as Spain, Czechoslovakia, Chile and Siberia.

Good Things for the Family Menu

By NELLIE MAXWELL

It is well to teach your boy to wash his hands, to be polite to learn his lessons, but there is nothing you can teach him that will have more to do with making a man of him than to grind into his mind daily that he is to keep his word, even if it takes a leg.—W. C. Dunlap.

WHEN there seems to be nothing for a vegetable that appeals, cook some pork chops and serve with them:

Onions and Apples.

Slice three or four onions and cook them in a little bacon fat until transparent, then add twice as many sliced apples, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, salt and a few dashes of white pepper. Stir during the cooking and season again before serving. A sour or tart apple is best for this dish.

Salmon Macaroni.

Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter and stir in two tablespoonfuls of flour; when well mixed add two cupfuls of tomato soup and cook two minutes. Add a large can of flaked salmon, one chopped onion and salt and pepper to season; simmer five minutes. Make a border of three cupfuls of cooked macaroni on a hot platter, pour inside the salmon mixture and sprinkle the top with one-half cupful of grated cheese and garnish with two sliced hard-cooked eggs. Serve hot.

Chicken Vegetable Loaf.

Beat two eggs, add one cupful of milk, three cupfuls of cooked chicken, one and one-half cupfuls of small peas, one cupful of diced carrots, one small onion, one teaspoonful of mustard, two teaspoonfuls of salt, pepper to taste and one teaspoonful of minced parsley and two teaspoonfuls of chili sauce. Mix and make into a loaf and bake fifty minutes. Serve with:

Mushroom Sauce.

Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter, add four tablespoonfuls of flour; after cooking a teaspoonful of onion in the fat simmer with one and one-half cupfuls of milk, one can of mushrooms, salt, pepper and minced parsley to taste. Cook five minutes.

The Ridge-Pole Yammerkat

By Hugh Hutton.

(Author of Nutty Natural History.)

THIS pestiferous creature is found in some of the smaller Holland villages, where it perches in large numbers on the house tops and yammers all night long. In the olden days when storks were plentiful, they would not stand for the racket, and the roofs were cleared of the pests every night by raiding storks. The beast is very hard to exterminate, as it has around nineteen lives, although a direct hit from a Dutchman's shoe will knock out seven or eight of them. The yammerkat never eats, so it cannot be starved out.

The creature, as the picture shows, is as thin as a rail, having a matchstick for a body and a spaghetti tail. The head is a single peanut, with split navy bean ears and popcorn nose. Toothpicks answer for the legs and split lima beans for the feet. The different parts are fastened together with chewing gum.

Macaroni Chinese Dish

Macaroni appears to have been the invention of the Chinese. It was introduced into Europe by the Germans, from whom the Italians learned of it. By the Fourteenth century they were the only people enjoying it. The method of manufacturing it was held a great secret. Later, however, this secret leaked out to a cook in France, and it is recorded that Louis XIII was induced to order it in an inn in Tours. He was so favorably impressed that he had his own cook study the method of preparation.

Playing Cards

What European country first had playing cards is much debated, for all have made claims. Probably starting from Hindustan, they went east and west around the world. One authority gives precedence to the claim of Italy, with Spain a close contender. However, reference works offer a bewildering variety of assertion on these points. Eliezer Edwards' "Dictionary of Words, Facts and Phrases" ascribes their origin to Arabia, and asserts that they were brought to Europe during the Crusades.

Wind and Thermometer

The weather bureau says that the thermometer is not affected by the wind velocity after having once attained the temperature of the wind. The physical discomfort usually associated with high winds is due to the rapid removal of heat from the human body on account of the winds. As no heat is generated by a thermometer, its readings are therefore not affected by the wind velocity.

Some Neighborly Hints

TO WASH a flannel skirt soak it in cold water overnight, so it will not shrink. Then wash it in warm water and put in a very little borax. Rinse in cold water and dry in a good wind. When almost dry, iron on the wrong side.

Left-over bacon, end pieces, etc., are all precious adjuncts in flavoring other food combinations. A plain bread stuffing is much improved by the addition of chopped bacon. Add one-half cup of the bacon to two cups of bread crumbs. Lessen the amount of salt called for in the recipe.

To clean light colored felt hats rub the entire surface with fine sandpaper and dust lightly with a white powder.

A little sugar sprinkled into the water in which potatoes are boiled will make them white and floury.

When it is necessary to iron a rough-dry garment at once, try this method: Dampen it, roll tight, wrap it in a cloth and then in paper, and put into the oven while the irons are heating. Evaporation will cause it to be thoroughly dampened in a very few minutes. But care must be taken that the oven is not hot enough to scorch the garment.

Kitchen Equipment as Presents

By BETSY CALLISTER

THE most useful clock in the house is the kitchen clock and interestingly enough it is the clock that usually keeps the best time. Probably because kitchen clocks are chosen for service anyway and are not kept around merely for ornament when they no longer tell the truth, as is often the case with more ornamental living-room clocks.

There are electric clocks made for the kitchen—very smart and simple and in various colors to go with possible kitchen color schemes—blue, green or yellow. Fastened on the wall in a prominent position in the kitchen a clock of this sort is well worth while, keeping correct time all of its own accord. A practical, useful sort of wedding present one of these clocks would make for any bride.

Once it would have been considered rather absurd to select any sort of kitchen equipment for a wedding present, but young women today are so generally interested in having attractive, well-equipped kitchens and kitchen things are so attractive that the old prejudice has ceased to exist. For the young couple who are planning to go to housekeeping in their own little bungalow, what news would be better than the fact that Uncle Bill was planning to give them a really fine electric or gas stove, and that Aunt Nellie was going to spend her wedding present quota for kitchen utensils to match—colored enamel or aluminum with colored handles?

Ancients Fond of Snails

Pliny mentions that the ancients reared snails for food in the environs of Rome as early as 50 B. C., feeding them on a diet of meal and boiled wine. In the Middle Ages snails provided a highly prized variant to the fish menus on Fridays and during Lent.

Those good old-fashioned cold remedies—oil of mustard, menthol, camphor—are mixed with other valuable ingredients in Musterole to make it what doctors call a "counter-irritant" because it gets action and is not just a salve. It penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses. Keep Musterole handy—jars, tubes. How you feel in the morning tells the real story

THAT'S the time you should feel like whistling and singing. Your muscles should itch to tackle the day's work. Your mind should quickly solve the problem that baffled you the afternoon before. Don't let your health slip away so that a night's rest fails in its natural recuperative powers. When you awaken with a "dragged out" physical or mental feeling, heed those bad symptoms. That's the time you need a dependable tonic to help restore your old time energy. Try a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which is sold by druggists.

Bad Stomach Cause of Bad Skin

You can't expect to have a good clear skin if your stomach is weak and disordered. Undigested food sends poisons through the body, pimples appear—skin grows sallow and loses color. But these troubles will end quickly and skin clear up if you will start today taking Tanlac.

Tanlac is made from herbs, barks and roots. A tablespoonful before each meal stimulates the digestion naturally so that you can digest what you eat. And when your stomach is in good shape again, watch how quickly skin begins to clear up. At your druggist's. Money back if it doesn't help you.

Chicago.—First Aid-Home Remedy Week, Sterling Products' "better merchandising and greater advertising baby," celebrates its tenth anniversary March 15-21. Druggists everywhere will co-operate. "Fill That Medicine Chest Now!" is the slogan of action. The National Association of Retail Druggists sponsored the event in 1922, and with the National Wholesale Druggists' Association and National Association of Retail Drug Clerks have, with other organizations, massed their energies for success of this movement for the abolition of much needless suffering and often the salvage of life.

Dr. W. E. Weiss was first to okay the idea as a splendid aid to preparedness for unexpected illness or accident. This is stressed as sensible insurance for immediate relief.

The every-spring festival of sales is a fixture of housecleaning time. Sterling Products is giving a tenth anniversary surprise party to every druggist in America—for the Dominion as well as the States endorses this idea of a more intensive advertising effort in Druggum. Replacing the old streamers there has been adopted a colorful poster representing a filled medicine chest displaying the slogan of each past success: "Fill That Medicine Chest Now."

ORLAND PARK

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Mains returned home last Saturday after spending several weeks vacation in Florida. They made the trip by auto, stopping at many points of interest along the route.

The recent snow storm completely blocked the roads in many places and much shoveling had to be done to get traffic going again. A snow plow was also used to clear the roads.

The blizzard last week-end gave the Public Service Co., a problem to solve in providing Orland Park with better electric service. It has been seven years since the first wires were strung into the village. The load has grown very fast but the company has not provided the village with another tie-in line to use in case of a storm. The council should request that the service be improved.

Notices have appeared for the coming village election. There are 3 trustees and a mayor to be elected this year. The election takes place on the third Tuesday in April. Petitions must be filed with the village clerk 35 days prior to the election.

The village water tank has been given a thorough cleaning and with its new coat of paint, is once more ready for service. Mr. Kay reports several improvements have been made to insure steady pressure and ample water supply especially in case of fire.

J. F. Schmadeke, local insurance agent, handed a check covering the recent fire loss to Jake Rusick, the barber. Jake is planning to open up shop again as soon as his arm is healed so that he can handle a razor.

The high school held a toboggan party at the Palos slide Tuesday evening. After the party they all stopped in at the Purple Candle for "the eats". Mr. Beckloff rode the rear of the sled and reported a "hot" time.

Rev. W. H. Medlar and family of Christ Lutheran church moved their household goods to Chicago last Thursday. His many friends regret to have the pastor and his family leave the community.

A late model hotpoint electric range was received by the Electric Shop this week and has been added to the other modern equipment on display in this shop.

Dr. Carmichael has a faithful dog. During Saturday's snow storm the doctor was called out and his car was stalled in a drift. He had to abandon the car and later missed the pet dog he had with him and feared he had become lost in the snow. Next day when the doctor arrived in a sled to get the car he was surprised to see his pet dog sitting on the running board of the car waiting for him.
